Volume 2: Content: References and Appendices

References........................................................................................................................................341

Appendices......................................................................................................................................405
References

British Association for Counselling and Psychotherapy [BACP]. 2013a. Accreditation of Training Courses. Lutterworth: BACP.

British Association for Counselling and Psychotherapy [BACP]. 2016d. BACP Website Homepage. Available at http://www.bacp.co.uk/. [Accessed 9 September 2016].

Feltham, C., 2004a. Problems are us: Or is it just me? Felixstowe: Braiswick.

364

Hewett, A., 2015. Less research, more marketing. Therapy Today. 26(1). 42. Lutterworth: BACP.

Hock, C. M., 2008. What is the single most important issue you see facing the counselling profession over the next decade? Counselling Today. 49(12). 51-52.

IRB Advisor, 2010b. Concerns to consider in reviewing web studies. IRB advisor. 10(7). 75. Atlanta, GA: AHC Media. LLC.

Mayring, P., 2002. Qualitative content analysis – research instrument or mode of interpretation? In M. Kiegelmann (Ed.), The role of the researcher in qualitative psychology. 139–148. Tübingen: Verlag Ingeborg Huber.

Reeves, A., 2015a. From the Chair. Our counselling professional bodies have to find ways to work together. Therapy Today. April, 2015. 26(3). 46. Lutterworth: BACP.

Tomkins, L. and Eatough, V., 2010. Reflecting on the use of IPA with focus groups: Pitfalls and potentials. Qualitative Research in Psychology. 7(3). 244-262.

Williams, P., 2016. Counselling in drama: An inside view on how to approach the subject of counselling. BACP Media Centre. Available at bacp.co.uk/mediacentre. [Accessed 8 March 2017].

Wootton, A. C., 2011. How counsellors and psychotherapists perceive their experiences relating to the group dynamics of their postgraduate diploma training course, and how they consider learning to be affected by these experiences. Unpublished dissertation. University of East London.

Yerkes, R. M. and Dodson, J. D., 1908. The relation of strength of stimulus to rapidity of habit-formation. Journal of Comparative Neurology and Psychology. 18. 459-482.

