The work for the M.A. dissertation is the result of a large amount of research into the canonization, saintly miracles and cults of holy-bishops in England and I am grateful to many people for their help and assistance in the creation of this piece of work. I have the honour, and great pleasure to acknowledge my debt to those who have helped me along the way.

Firstly, I wish to first thank some of my close friends who have painstakingly sat and listened to me during the past year, often offering to read parts and telling me where I do not quite make sense. Therron Welstead, for being a fantastic support, listening to me talk about bishop-saints for the most of the last year and offering extremely useful advice. And an especial thank you to Thomas Hirons, who has been especially helpful and kind enough to read through the work, offering the right amount of encouragement and criticism.

I also owe a great deal to my parents for all their help, support and patience whilst I was doing my M.A. and for enduring long phonecalls as I talked about saints, models and miracles. Their belief in me has inspired me to always be the best I can, and always write to the best of my ability, and I thank them whole heartedly for giving me the confidence to be able to achieve what I have so far.

Finally, I owe a massive debt of gratitude to the unfaltering guiding hands of my supervisor, Professor Janet Burton, who always managed to make herself available for questions and counsel. Her help, support, and encouragement with regards to this work furnished me with invaluable advice when it almost seemed like this dissertation was too much, and her patience and guidance, along with that of Dr Andy Abram, over the past five years at Lampeter through my B.A. and M.A. has made all of this worthwhile.
